

Our class was posed the question, "What are the positive and negative aspects of teaching?" We had many different ideas, but came to a common theme. Like the pieces of a puzzle, it is all connected...the good and the bad, the yin and the yang. You can't have one without the other.

Working With Youngsters

- *When the "light" finally goes on
- *Defending the underdog
- *Expanding minds
- *Loving students
- *Creating a safe haven for students
- *Making real connections
- *Being a positive example for a student
- *Being living proof that learning is a fun, life long process
- *Students become your family

Emotional Overload

- *Brain overload
- *Not stable: kids, classes, and politics
- *Need for self examination/criticism
- *Need for "staying power" to get through today, this week, this year
- *Need ability to think "tomorrow is another day"
- *Feeling failure when you don't reach a student

Collegial Rapport

- *Camaraderie with teachers
- *Off-campus lunches with colleagues
- *Supportive administrators

Work Load

- *Lots of boring time spent grading papers/paperwork
- *Spending lots of extra time doing work at home
- *Spending your own money to buy what you need
- *Your first year can be overwhelming

Vacation

- *Summer vacation, winter and spring break
- *Being able to travel
- *Minimum Days

The Real World of Teaching

(What professors and books don't tell you)
According to EDML 5001, Dr. Wink, Fall '04

Reality Check

- *You teach in the real world, not an ideal world
- *Realizing that you can't save everyone
- *Students who have the ability, but do not take advantage of it
- *Being unable to overcome/affect/change

Professional Fulfillment

- *Learning something well enough to teach it
- *Earning your pay with the work you do
- *Working at an occupation that is for the greater good, not just to make money
- *Working with supportive parents who want what's good for their children

Emotional Fulfillment

- *Impacting someone's life
- *Feeling Alive
- *Having a "nice" feeling
- *When you receive a note from a student
- *When past students become teachers
- *The small things, like a smile

Politics and Administration

- *Dealing with the politics and government in education
- *Criticism from the public/those outside education
- *Pressure from principals
- *Probation versus tenure
- *Working with difficult parents
- *The ever-swinging pendulum
